Interview Questions for Secondary Teachers

CC 12  Careers Centre
'On interview day, remember that one of the key characteristics that Head Teachers will be looking for in candidates is the ability to engage effectively with students. Despite being in a room you have never been in, in a school that is new to you, with students you have never met before – it is very important to try and develop a relationship with the young people at every opportunity.'

Preparation for Your Interview!

- Make sure you have a photocopy of your application form, letter, CV etc. Remember that questions may be asked about what you have written – try and work out what might be asked and prepare your answer.

- If you had a person specification, interview questions will be based around this. Look at this – again you should be able to work out what kind of questions you will be asked. Be prepared for questions about assessing students/pupils and about the differing ways in which your subject can be accredited (e.g. GCSE/BTEC).

- The same applies for job descriptions and school details. Issues and topics which are relevant to the job description and school ethos may form the basis of interview questions.

- Most schools are now asking interviewees to do a micro teaching session – you should get notice of this prior to interview. Most schools will ask for candidates to teach a lesson on the interview day. The duration of teaching varies but is usually 50-60 minutes. Notice should be in the letter or phone call inviting you to interview with an indication of who to contact if you have questions are resources or room set up. If in doubt – ask!

There is usually a tour of the school arranged during the interview – which is often led by my students. Students will be asked after the tour about for their impressions about the candidates – so ensure you've tried to engage with them.

Some schools also have a student interview panel as a component of their “student voice” work. Students taken this responsibility very seriously and, although not usually involved in the final decision, careful note is taken of what they elicit from their interview. Be friendly, relaxed and think about the questions you might have asked if you had been in a similar position as a student.

- If you have visited a school prior to the interview make sure that you can comment on what you have thought about it and maybe select one thing that particularly impressed you.

- Make sure you are up to date with the latest developments in secondary education – especially what has been on the news or in the latest issues of the TES.

- Take along examples of your work or a portfolio of your teaching practices. Offer this to the panel to view but don’t take offence if they refuse to look at it. Some may have time and some may not. At least you are demonstrating your enthusiasm for the post by bringing along evidence of your work.

- First impressions are very important! Dress smartly – but comfortably! Smile, shake hands, and look enthusiastic. Sit comfortably in your chair. Don’t be intimidated by five or six people on an interview panel. Try hard to make eye contact with all of the panel when you are answering questions. Often larger interview panels are not as rigorous in their questioning as two or three people can be.
• Have questions ready to ask towards the end of the interview (there’s no harm in writing them down before the interview or as they occur to you during the day and referring to them in the interview). No matter how painful you might have thought the interview experience was – make sure you thank the panel at the end of the interview.

• Always ask if it is possible to have feedback on your interview after the governors have made their decision. Even if you do not get this job — the feedback could make the difference for the next one!

GOOD LUCK!

Preparing your Portfolio

Advice from the Association of Teachers and Lecturers

Portfolios are gaining such importance now that it is becoming essential for applicants to keep one up-to-date as a professional demonstration of past work, skills and excellence. Just a few years ago portfolios were not really used very much, but this is rapidly changing and they’ve now become important accessories to applications, especially in the primary and special sectors.

There’s no doubt that collecting together the best examples of your work gives a real boost to confidence levels. By highlighting your successes, you offer interviewers an extremely positive focus for questioning – as well as allowing your skills to speak for themselves!

The type of folder to use

The ideal size of your portfolio folder is A3, so that it’s big enough to hold relatively large examples of pupils’ work as well as other documents relating to planning. Make sure it looks presentable and is well labelled. Most good stationers and art suppliers stock selections of portfolio folders. Choose a folder without inner plastic pockets for ease of retrieval during the interview – the last thing you want is to be fumbling with stubborn pockets which are reluctant to relinquish their contents. Place the contents of your folder in the order you want to retrieve each item.

What to include in your portfolio

Jan Blakes and Brian Aikens, teachers from East Sussex, suggest including the following items in your portfolio:

- A sample of your planning, both medium-term and short-term
- An example of your assessment of pupils’ work
- Photographs of displays, special events such as class outings you have been involved in, or visiting speakers.
- Samples of pupils’ work (particularly work that reflects the standards you value or your philosophy of teaching).
- Samples of your work and pupils’ work that indicates your understanding of current education issues – perhaps some work on citizenship or the numeracy and literacy strategies.

Unless you’re applying for a job very early into your training, you’ll have material you can include in a portfolio, but be selective. Although it’s advisable to include items that reflect your excellence, it can also be positive to include something that demonstrates your ability to learn from your experiences, especially if you’re a newly-qualified teacher. Many interviews include questions on how well candidates bounced back from classroom ‘disasters’, which reveal your skills as a reflective practitioner.
When preparing for an interview, take anything out of your portfolio that isn’t pertinent to the job specification, so that you’ll be able to make use of everything.

INTERVIEW PROCEDURE

Interviews normally take place at the school concerned. They may last for half or a whole day and usually comprise:-

- Informal talks with a Senior Teacher/Head of Department and perhaps other members of staff. This part of the procedure is extremely important as it can ultimately sway the balance for or against you, especially as Heads of Department often take part in the subsequent panel interview. This can be a good time to ask questions about e.g. The School's Code of Discipline, parental involvement and how the school funds specific projects.

- A tour of the school and possibly school lunch: remember you are being watched and assessed all the time from the moment you arrive and lunch and the school tour are no exception. You are more likely to make a favourable impression if you look interested, ask intelligent questions and talk to the children (but don’t disturb them too much).

- A panel interview which may last up to an hour. Interview panels can vary considerably in size but usually contain 4 – 6 people including the Head of Department and Subject.

- You may be expected to take part in a discussion with the other candidates while being observed by a selector. Examples of topics given to recent applicants are – “Class management and control”, and “Recent developments in the teaching of your subject”. You will be assessed on your knowledge of the topic and also how you behave in the group.

- Increasingly candidates are being asked to give a short lesson, presentation or lecture, sometimes to a class or to staff (i.e. potential colleagues) or to the interviewing panel. This is quite common in the further education sector. You should be given prior warning if they are expecting you to do this and your preparation needs to be thorough. This will be a key part of the selection process and feedback from candidates has been very positive about this part of the selection procedure where NQTs can showcase their talents and skills in the classroom. Take copies of your lesson plan for the interview panel and be prepared for questions about your aims and objectives, choice of teaching materials and learning and teaching strategies employed etc.

Planning Your Lesson/Micro-Teach

Part of your application is likely to involve you teaching a full lesson (up to 50 minutes) or a micro-teach (20-30 minutes).

Class Data

Ensure you have data about the group beforehand – year group, size of group, their level, what they have already covered, will there be a Teaching Assistant present etc. If you are not provided with this information, feel free to contact the school and ask to speak to the class teacher. Sometimes this is part of the recruitment process because it demonstrates your confidence, initiative and forward planning.
School Research
Make sure you have fully researched the school – look at OFSTED reports, the Contextual Value Added (CVA) score and familiarise yourself with the school's areas for development. This can help tailor your session.

Planning the Session
- Be aware of how to make your lesson outstanding
- Keep it simple
- Establish ground rules at the beginning
- Use pupils’ names – use sticky labels and write one for yourself too.
- Be flexible and prepared to change your lesson plan if necessary.
- Include differentiated learning outcomes.
- Use IT if possible – e.g. show a short video clip or a picture at the beginning of the lesson as a hook to get pupils interested.
- Observers will be interested in your motivational activities; do not have your pupils doing lots of writing, although a short worksheet as part of the activity is acceptable.
- Use high quality resources
- Include lots of questions to test learning
- Try to include RWCM (Reading, Writing, Communication and Maths) in your lesson.
- Give a copy of your lesson plan to the observers/interviewers.

Evaluating Your Lesson at Interview
As part of your interview you will sometimes be asked to evaluate your lesson. Do not just describe the lesson but identify what went well and what went badly. Focus on what you did (e.g. I prepared well) rather than what the class did (the pupils behaved well). Talk about pupil engagement including how you know they met the learning outcomes. Mention impact when relevant and explain how you would do things differently next time.

Remember that initial impact is all-important and that interviewers tend to form an overall impression at a very early stage, i.e. during the first few minutes. It helps to smile and, if you can, try to look relaxed and at ease. Remember that the interviewers themselves may be nervous and that they may also wish to make a good impression on the other members of the panel.

It is advisable to play safe and dress neatly and even conservatively, appear confident, avoid irritating physical mannerisms and verbal repetitions, and look at the panel. Don’t talk too much, if you are afraid that you may be too long winded you can always pause and ask “Do you require further details?” On the other hand, don’t simply answer ‘Yes’ or ‘No’.

It is difficult to anticipate every kind of question that you will be asked however you should be able to work out what most of the questions will be.

- Typical NQT interview questions – see examples in this guide.
- Specific questions around the person specification, job description on information you have about the post/school
- Typical questions i.e. What has been in the TES/news about the teaching of your subject or any new initiatives
• Research – what is the ethos of the school? What are the most important things they are looking for in their teachers/What continually appears in school literature, website, mission statement etc as being important to the school/
• What questions would you like to ask the panel?

Most interviews will focus on your application and supporting statement including your course and teaching practice, previous work experience, interests, why you want or feel you are suited to this particular job in this particular school, what you feel you can contribute etc. This is why the work you did before completing the application form is so important since ultimately you will be able to put across your ideas, aims, motivations, interests and strengths with more honesty and conviction at the interview.

Don’t be afraid to repeat information you put in your application, you cannot assume that all the panel have read it thoroughly, let alone will remember what you said in it.

The degree of specialist knowledge of what you are saying will inevitably be very varied around the interview table so beware of underestimating what they know and seeming to talk down to them.

Be prepared to be constructively critical of yourself and others; perceptive, balanced criticism of your training course and what you made of it is far more impressive than either excessive praise or blanket criticism.

Above all, when suffering from pre-interview nerves, try to relax and be yourself and remember that you are qualified to do the job or you would not be called for interview. Somebody has to be appointed – why not you?

If you have to prepare an interview lesson, here are some tips gleaned from a range of head teachers:
• Go equipped. Take your own resources. Photocopy plans and props just in case the school photocopier is on the blink.
• Check what information you will be given about the class prior to the lesson. Use this to inform your planning and teaching.
• Keep it simple but ensure you show differentiation in plans and tasks. Have an alternative activity up your sleeve in case what you’ve planned isn’t working.
• Make it interactive – avoid lengthy monologues – pupils and staff will soon switch off. Keep the class involved with hands-on activities and open questions.
• Show enthusiasm. Be positive but avoid blanket praise – children know when they’re being patronised.
• You are allowed to have a sense of humour; in fact, most schools would view this as a vital pre-requisite. Once you nerves settle, try to make it fun.
• Choose comfortable and appropriate clothes. A suit may look good at interview but is it practical in the classroom?
• Do address behaviour issues – have a number of strategies you can use and check school procedures.

• Practice makes perfect – rehearse your planned lesson, preferably with a colleague who is likely to give you constructive feedback. This is a good confidence builder.

• Read OFSTED reports on schools prior to application

Search on the TES website for the latest news, forums and tips on interview lessons and preparation.

Example Questions

Introductory Questions

Tell us a little about yourself and why you have applied for this post in our school?
What do you think you can offer our school/this post?
Why do you want to work in this school?

The Course

Tell me about your degree/PGCE course.
When did you decide to apply for a place on a teacher training course and why?
What were the strengths and weaknesses of your course?
What parts of the course did you find most interesting and why?
Why did you choose this subject/these curriculum specialisms?
I was interested to read about your project on …………….. Tell me about it.
How have you developed in your subject (e.g. PE, Maths) during your course?
What leadership roles have you taken on during your PGCE course, including Teaching Practices?
How would you describe your relationship with other course members?

Lesson evaluation

Reflect on the lesson you taught today and tell us what went well and what you would do differently with hindsight.
Evaluate your lesson and tell us what Ofsted grade would you give our lesson and why?
Were the learning outcomes in your lesson today achieved and how do you know?
If you were teaching this class again tomorrow, what would you plan to do to follow up on today’s lesson?

Teaching

Why did you choose to teach this particular age range?
How would you use the locality of the school and its immediate environment?
How would you structure projects to give equal access to all pupils?
What are the important things to consider when setting up a classroom?
Describe a successful lesson to me which you taught recently. Why was it successful?
Give an example of a lesson you felt went particularly badly, and explain why. How did you resolve the situation?
How do you ensure all children are involved in learning in your lessons?
What do you think is the best way to motivate pupils?
If I walked into your classroom during an outstanding lesson, what would I see and hear?
What does an outstanding lesson look like?
What have you gained by studying your main subject at University?
How do you see (Maths, Business Education/Your subject) developing over the next three years?
What are the major issues in education at present?

The School

What makes a successful school?
How would you cope with lack of enthusiasm from colleagues?
Are you a member of a religious denomination (which)? Would you take part in the religious life of the school? (for religious schools)

Assessment and Progress

Could you explain what you would do in your class to ensure each child makes good progress and achieves their maximum potential?
Can you tell me how you use assessment to support learning?
Please tell us about your experience of assessment for learning and assessment of learning.
How do you assess and record your children’s progress?
How would you meet the needs of gifted and talented children in the class?
If a child doesn’t show signs of improvement after all your planning, monitoring, assessing etc, what do you do next?
What strategies do you use to manage children with special educational needs?

Professional Issues

What are the main qualities of a good teacher?
What are your particular strengths as a teacher? How would you develop them further?
What are your weak areas and how are you overcoming them?
How would you seek to ensure high standards of discipline in your classroom?
Which of your teaching practices was the most successful and why?
Describe the best lesson given by you on a Teaching Practice
How would you ensure that you respond effectively to the different needs and abilities of individual pupils?

Curriculum/subject knowledge

Why do we teach (subject) in schools?
What experience do you have of teaching the National Curriculum?
What do you feel is the highest level of ability you are able to teach?
Choose a topic in your subject which is one that the pupils struggle most to understand/engage in, and tell us how you might go about teaching it?
Behaviour Management

For NQTs, behaviour management is often a focus area in your first year. Describe the way in which you will promote good behaviour in your classroom. Can you tell me about a successful behaviour management strategy you have used in the past that helped engage a pupil or group of pupils? What behaviour management policies have you experienced, and what do you consider as having been effective? How would you handle a disruptive child? What methods and means do you use to manage the behaviour of children?

Safeguarding

During a lesson, you notice a child has a round burn mark on their arm. You make a casual remark about it and the child tells you their father did it last night with his cigarette. What do you do next? Safeguarding children is a vital part of our work. Can you give me some examples of how you would contribute to making our school a safe environment for the children? How do you ensure that children in your class are safe? What would you do if a child disclosed ....?

Pastoral

How would you feel about taking on the responsibilities of being a form tutor? What is your experience of having parents in school? To what extent should this be developed? How would you assess your ability to make relationships with children? How would you seek to promote the spiritual, moral, social and cultural development of the children in your care?

Career Development

How will you develop yourself as a professional teacher? Where do you see yourself in 3/5 years time? What are your main strengths? What areas do you want to develop further. How will you develop yourself as a professional teacher. What Continuous Professional Development needs do you envisage needing to enable you to perform to the standards expected in this school? What has been the best bit of advice given to you and how did you act on it?

Parents

An irate parent bounces into your classroom at 9.00 am one morning, how will you handle this situation? What experience have you had meeting and/or communicating with parents? How will you/have you ensure/d a positive relationship with parents?

Other questions

If you overheard some colleagues talking about you, what would they say? Have you been involved in/can you contribute to any extracurricular activities? If we decided not to appoint you, what would we be missing out on? Is there anything else you would like to tell us in support of your application? Do you have any questions for us? Are you still a firm candidate for the job?
General Questions

Why did you become a teacher?
How did you plan for your teaching?
How would you feedback to the children about their progress?
What has attracted you to this geographical area?
Tell me about your system of record keeping?
How would you implement an equal opportunities policy in your class?
How important do you think the school is in the community?
How do you deal with disruptive behaviour?
What are the advantages/disadvantages of working in a school of this type?
What safety factors would you keep in mind when designing a practical lesson?
What are your views on homework?
What would you do with a pupil who swore at you in class?

Personal aspects for you to consider

How easy will it be for you to get there?
Are you able to work in the evenings?
Can you drive and have you a car?
If you were to offered the post are you in a position to accept it?  (If you are offered the job you will normally be expected to give an answer there and then and abide by it, so if you have other interviews arranged with schools you prefer you will have to think carefully about how to respond to this question).

Your Own Questions

Interviews should be reciprocal affairs, providing you with the opportunity to learn more about the job, the working environment, colleagues etc. You will almost certainly be asked whether you have any questions towards the end of your interview. Only ask questions if you really want to know the answers, don’t ask them solely to impress; however, they can indicate a genuine interest in the post, the school and the area.

Be aware of time constraints and do not ask too many. If you genuinely have no questions, reply, “No thank you, all the points I wished to raise have already been dealt with (either in the interview or earlier in the day)”

Of course, you are not going to be asked all these questions and there are many others you may be asked but this gives you a flavour of the possibilities. Trying to think of persuasive answers on the spot can be difficult for some of these so some time spent beforehand considering the likely questions and trying the answers out on a friend could be a useful exercise. Or investigate whether it is possible to have a mock interview perhaps through your department or your careers service. And remember that whilst the content of your answers is very important so too is your body language and the clarity of your speech. Always sound positive, enthusiastic and make sure everyone can hear you! Maintain eye contact and avoid distracting mannerisms.
Salary

NQTs generally start their careers on the first point of the main pay scale known as M1. Those working in Inner London have a different version of the scale with higher rates because of the increased costs of living.

From September 1st 2013 an NQT on M1 will start on £21,804 per annum.
Inner London £27,270, Outer London £25,369

Further information can be found on the NASUWT website at: http://www.nasuwt.org.uk/PayPensionsandConditions/England/Pay/PayscalesinEngland/index.htm

ACCEPTANCE OF OFFERS

It is normal practice, within education, for applicants for a specific post to be asked to wait around after their interview for the panel to make their decision. The successful candidate is then called back into the room and offered the job and they are then expected to say whether or not they accept the offer.

If you find yourself in this situation it is of course possible for you to ask if you can let them know in a few days time, perhaps because you have another interview arranged and want to know the outcome. However, you must be prepared for the possibility that the school will not agree and will then offer the job to someone else.

Once again, as with the question of your starting salary, what you decide to do will depend on how strong a position you feel yourself to be in and how much you want that particular job.

It is also normal practice for Local Authorities to require applicants to confirm acceptance of an offer in writing. However, even a verbal acceptance constitutes a contract and it is considered unprofessional behaviour to continue applying for other teaching posts.

Advice from the NAS/UWT on Appointments & Interviews
(Taken from Finding Your First Teaching Post)

If you are offered the appointment verbally and you accept, this offer should be followed by a written confirmation of appointment, which, if you are to be given additional incremental credit, should confirm the salary point at which you will be appointed. Make your acceptance in writing.

If you have other job interviews in the pipeline, immediately inform the schools, withdrawing from the interviews, so that other candidates may be invited to replace you.

When confirming your acceptance of the post, ask the school for details of their induction programme if this has not already been sent to you. You should also make arrangements to obtain access to schemes of work, syllabus, etc., so that you may prepare during the summer the work you wish to undertake at the beginning of the Autumn term.
Some schools may offer employment for the last weeks of the summer term.

Multiple Interviews

What if you are offered interviews for more than one post? It may be that the post that you really want is the interview that comes up last. Also, as you will be under less pressure than the other candidates at the first interview, being more concerned to get the second job than the first, you will be more relaxed and therefore more confident, likely to interview well and become the successful candidate.

Do you turn down the job offer in hand in order to attend the interview for your preferred job? If the second interview is close to the first, do you ask for time to consider the first job offer, in the hope that you will be successful at the second interview? Do you accept the first job, attend the interview for the second job and if successful there then withdraw from the first post?

This is an area where the Association is unable to offer advice. Interviewing panels are made up of individuals whose responses to circumstances the Association cannot predict.

- An interviewing panel may be understanding and would defer making an appointment until you have attended the second interview. However, your request would indicate that their school was your second choice and that is unlikely to endear you to your possible future employers.

- If you accept the post and subsequently withdraw you are technically in breach of contract, for an acceptance, even a verbal acceptance is a contractual arrangement. The school may not only request the return of any expenses paid, it could also demand the costs of re-advertising and re-interviewing to fill the post.
