The employer supports the student to attend face to face sessions required for the period of study.
There is a named mentor in the practice area, allocated to the student, who will support the development of the appropriate skill to underpin the student's portfolio development.
If an issue develops around mentorship, the employer agrees to actively seek out alternative mentors and/or allocation to clinical areas where the student is able to demonstrate they have acquired the necessary skill required to pass the course.

The employer will pay for the moderator's travel and accommodation (if necessary) to perform the summative assessment in practice.
If the employer recognises that there is no support for the student currently in their organisation they are able to request consultancy from the programme leaders. If this is required, consultancy to support staff development would incur a negotiated cost.
