

Title: Exploring Online Teaching and Learning Spaces in an Art and Design Environment

Abstract: At University of the Arts London (UAL) a variety of online platforms are used by students and academics for teaching and learning. University developed and supported platforms include: Moodle; teaching and learning blogs (myblog.arts); and a customised instance of the ePortfolio platform Mahara which we call 'Workflow' and which is heavily used at UAL. A variety of external platforms and bespoke solutions are also used.

This year we have started to record interviews with academics to explore why and how they are using particular online learning spaces within their courses. The aim of this exercise is to surface and explore interesting and emerging pedagogical practice within an art and design learning environment. This Pecha Kucha will introduce and explore some of the themes appearing so far.

Mr John Jackson
Educational Developer (eLearning)
University of the Arts London